

One course that neither Tom nor I will ever equal again is Loch Lomond. Nature and history provided us a site beyond compare. Loch Lomond is the most famous and perhaps the most beautiful lake in Scotland, and the Club grounds include streams, marshlands, and majestic trees – some of which are as much as 800 years old. Towering hills that mark the beginning of the Scottish Highlands frame the views... Tom and I will be forever grateful, not only to have been the first American golf course architects to be asked to design a course in Scotland, the birthplace of golf, but to have been blessed with a site that will draw golfers from all over the world... through the 21st century and beyond.
